

How many of these actions constitute plagiarism?

- Copying someone else's words
- Copying someone else's words without foot/endnote
- Paraphrasing someone else's words
- Paraphrasing someone else's words without foot/endnote
- Copying someone else's organization for their paper
- Copying someone else's organization for their paper without foot/endnote
- Copying designs, drawing or graphs from someone else's paper
- Having someone else writing most or all of the student's paper
- Submitting a paper where there is no original thought
- Submitting a paper that has been cut and pasted in part or all from a website or papermill

Liddell, Jean and Valerie Fong. 2005. Faculty Perceptions of Plagiarism. Journal of College and Character 6(2).

Accessed 3/21/2011: <http://journals.naspa.org/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1416&context=jcc>